

HAMPTON, PHOEBUS AND OLD POINT—Continued.

STILL DULL ON EXCHANGE

Only One of Two Periods of Comparative Activity.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS WERE FEW

Special Movement in Brooklyn Rapid Transit Served to Help the Market.—Money Rate Reached Ten Per Cent, the Highest Since July.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—The stock exchange was in a lethargic state for a time today, in spite of one or two periods of comparative activity which served to bring up the total of the day's transactions.

New developments were few and assertions concerning special stocks had an influence confined to individual stocks. A special movement in Brooklyn Rapid Transit helped to hold the market.

Rate Touched Ten Per Cent.

Money on call started easier than yesterday, but showed a stiffening tendency again as the day progressed, the rate touching 10 per cent, the highest of the week, or since the first week in July.

The fall in the price of cotton following the publication of the estimates of condition and of the amount of the crop, was evidence of the favorable interpretation of those reports made by the trade. The effect on stocks was little. The late flurry in call money dominated the closing time which was easy.

Bonds were firm. Total sales, par value, $1,474,000. United States bonds were unchanged and quiet.

All He Did.

"You are charged," said the court, reading the formal complaint, "with having wilfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought appropriated to your own use and below a certain article to wit, a vehicle—said vehicle having been wrongfully and feloniously abstracted by you from the premises of one John Doe, contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of Illinois."

"I'm not guilty, judge," protested the prisoner.

"All I done was to steal a buggy,"—Chicago Tribune.

Hard Times in Kansas.

The old days of grasshoppers and drought are almost forgotten in the prosperous Kansas of today; although a citizen of Coffey, Earl Shamburg, has not yet forgotten a hard time he encountered. He says: "I was worn out and discouraged by coughing night and day, and could find no relief till I tried Dr. King's New Discovery. It took less than one bottle to completely cure me." The safest and most reliable cough and cold remedy and lung and throat healer ever discovered. Guaranteed by all Druggists. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

The Detective Genius.

(Original.)
In summing up these things, said the veteran detective, that go to make success there is one element we usually leave out. It's luck. My opinion is that it's nine-tenths of the game. Napoleon, the great war genius, recognized this and had every confidence in his star of destiny. That star went down eventually and left him in the dark like other people. The next best thing to luck I consider intuition, or the feeling that something is so without knowing it to be so.

I made a big reputation in my day, my only aids being these two—luck and feeling. The case that did me most good and made my superiors think I was a great detective were brought about almost exclusively by luck. I was in government service then and was sent out west to look up the perpetrators of some $1,000 counterfeit bills. St. Louis was the point the money was supposed to emanate from, and there I went. This was the only pointer I had, and my work was very much like looking for a needle in a haystack.

A good way to get rid of these counterfeiters of large denominations is in gambling houses where large stakes are played for. There's too much excitement for people to scrutinize anything closely. After spending several days without even getting a suspicion of a clue to work on I went one evening into a gambling den. I didn't go there to get a clue because I hadn't then thought of the facilities such places afforded for distributing the "queer." I went because I don't know what I went for. The place had been recently opened, and the owner, a respectable looking man, was dealing fairly. I watched the game for some time, went out to the theater and came back about half past 11. Fact is I was hungry and I'd heard that a fine supper was set out after 11. After supper I lit a cigar and went to the faro table. The game, which when I had left it early in the evening was small, had grown very large. I noticed several piles before different players to indicate that the bank was having a run of bad luck.

I've always been a bit of a gambler myself. I had no money to play with, for I was at the time drawing a small salary and really had no funds with me except for ordinary expenses. The truth is that from the time I had entered the gambling place I had turned to take a hand at the game. I had torn myself away to the theater, and I question if my return was not as much due to the fascination the game had for me as the supper. At any rate, the longer I looked on the more restless became my desire to try my luck. I had several of the $1,000 counterfeit bills in my pocket and was tempted to make a start in the game with one of them, but, besides the dishonor of playing counterfeit money, suppose I should be detected using it. I could never explain the matter. It was unexplainable. Then the idea came into my head that I might claim I was working in the line of my business, though that would be pretty thin. Anyway, I finally couldn't withhold the temptation any longer and, pulling out one of the bills, slipped it on the big square to win.

The dealer started. It was natural that he should start. Thousand dollar bills weren't plentiful, though I had caught sight of two or three during the evening changing hands. One winner I had seen paid one by the bank. Still, coppering with one was unusual. The dealer looked at me with the most curious expression I ever saw on a man's face. Then he asked as calmly as a sucking dove:

"How much stands?"

"Five hundred," I said.

The cards were dealt, and the big square won. I was handed five $100 bills, four of which I shoved in my pocket with the counterfeit, putting the other on the game. I soon lost all I had won and, realizing the risk I had run, left the house.

On the street a man spoke to me. "Let up," he said. "There's been detectives sent out from Washington; probably in town now."

It didn't take me six months to discover that I'd struck something pretty big, though I hadn't the remotest idea of an explanation.

"All right," I said. "What's the next move?"

"Don't know yet. Who put you on?"

"You keep your end to yourself, and I'll keep mine."

"What were you up to, anyway, shovin' the bill?"

I remembered the curious look of the dealer when I'd made my bet, and a ray of light began to break in on me. The faro bank must be a distributing point. Persons supplied with the bills would come in, bet them and they would be paid out to winners who, if they discovered the counterfeit, would be chary of making a charge that would be a confession that they had been gambling.

I'm only telling you this story to illustrate what luck will do for a man. How I proved my suspicions and nabbed the whole gang is a story in itself and one in which I take some pride, but that was dead easy in comparison with getting a clue where there was no clue in sight. When I offered the bill, not knowing me, the dealer showed surprise. When I went out he sent one of the gang after me to make discoveries, supposing I had been supplied with the bills to pass in, and not understanding my movements.

The fellow he sent gave the whole thing away. Instead of being tried for swindling, as I should have been, I was considered a genius and given the best cases and the best pay.
J. ANTHONY TWining.

Reviving a Tired Honeybee.

The honeybee is proverbially industrious. When everything goes well with it no form of animal life has more vigor, works more zealously nor defends its home more bravely. But the bee soon loses its activity when separated from its home so that it cannot return, as, for example, when it gets into a room and fails to find its way out. Cold rain or lack of food also soon puts it into a feeble or exhausted condition, making it appear as if it were discouraged. But nearly all its usual activity may be restored by a little sugar of honey—St. Nicholas.

SCHOOL LUNCHEES.

See That the Basket Contains a Tempting, Nourishing Repast.

School days are here again, and as the children start back to study the problem of their lunches unpleasantly confronts many a mother.

In many cases it is almost impossible for the little one to return home for a warm midday meal, and so a lunch must be prepared five mornings each week for at least nine months of the year.

What to put in these baskets districts most mothers, so they fall back on the unwise expedient of putting up the same thing day after day until the child, sickened by the monotony, either loses its appetite or spends the weekly allowance on cheap sweets and cakes.

In many of the big schools of late there is a place where the scholars may buy nourishing broths, a glass of milk, sandwiches and other light and healthful food at a nominal cost. In such cases it will be found much easier as well as fully as cheap to set aside a stated sum each week for the school lunches.

True, the little ones may buy ice cream instead of soup and cake or pie in preference to sandwiches, but this may easily be regulated by parental injunction or even by a few words to the keeper of the refreshments asking her not to sell certain foods to a special child without a note from the mother.

Do not, however, omit to give the small boy or girl permission to indulge in sweets or ice cream at least once a week, as it is a positive grief to children not to be able to eat the things their schoolmates are enjoying.

Where there is not this lunch sold the mother should make it a point to see that the basket is filled with a tempting and well nourishing lunch. It should be also varied.

CLEANING MOIRE BELTS.

Scrub With Nailbrush Dipped in White Soapuds.

The moire belt in white and light colors which is so much worn just now is not very serviceable if, as many women think it must be, it is thrown away as soon as it is soiled.

No one wants to pay 50 cents a yard for a belt that can be used but a few times. So many girls wear dark belts that break the lines of their figure or use leather or daffia instead, though neither is as pretty nor so fashionable as the white or light tints.

This belting may be so easily cleaned that economy in this respect is scarcely necessary.

After your belt, whether white or colored, has become too soiled for use even by turning, spread it out on a flat marble slab or the top of the stationary washstand and scrub it carefully with a firm nailbrush dipped in a strong white soapuds. Treat both sides in this way; then, holding the ends very taut, run it under the cold water spigot until every particle of soap is removed.

Dry between a thick clean towel until very little dampness remains and then put on the sides of a porcelain bathtub, patting it well to exclude the air and make absolutely smooth. This prevents the danger of the crinkled look that often results if the belt is just hung up to dry over the back of a chair.

If carefully done these belts may be washed in this way four or five times, greatly prolonging their usefulness.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

For pressing all dark materials it is well to keep a cotton cover for that purpose alone, as colored materials are apt to stain.

A lovely skirt is made entirely of white pompadour ribbon about six inches wide. The skirt portion is inset with lace insertion eight inches wide. The circular skirt ruffle is made of the ribbon, lace and very fine nainsook.

sook tucks. The skirt is a foundation for a very plain dress of sheer white nainsook.

Huckaback toweling is used now for working Biesterder designs. The cross stitch is used instead of the solid embroidery stitch, yet often the work is done by overlapping each little square with colored floss. Toweling when so worked is nice for stand covers, dresser scarfs and cushions.

Just exactly the shape of a baking powder box are the new powder puff bags. The little affairs are cut from any colored kid and lined with soft colored silk. The bags are notched around the top and tied with little colored cords and tassels, a loop being made in the cord, which does not make it difficult to close or open the bag.

Your Second Best.

It is said that so many of us are content with our second best. We are always going to do better. We have vague ideas as to the great things we will do, but that is as far as we get.

Before you go to bed tonight think over your day. If you had it to live over again, would you spend it just as you have done?

Most of us would not. Well, we will have tomorrow.

No matter how well you do anything, try to do it better. Don't be satisfied with anything but the very best that you are capable of.

Remember that this is your chance. Don't lose your golden opportunity.

For an Aching Head.
Often an aching head may be quickly relieved by bathing the face and back of the neck with perfumed water as hot as you can stand it. Let hot cloths saturated with a strong cologne water be placed to the forehead and back of the ears.
